

I Know Too Much

Anne Murray

You live and learn, to crash and burn, and come out of the ashes, even more alive
You make you mistakes, whatever it takes, but know when to hit brakes, when to let it slide You can come cryin' on my shoulder, but don't ask me to show you the way
As I get wiser, as I get older, it seems like I've got less to say

I know too much, I've seen the light and I've been lost in the shadow of doubt
I know too much to give up on love, and I know too much, to ever
try to figure it out

Now what would I do, if I were you? Take my advice, don't take advice from me
There's no wrong or right, no black or white, just shades of gray, as far as I can see Promises, rules and hearts get broken, plans and minds and people change
One door slams and another door opens, don't ask me I can't explain

I know too much, I've seen the light and I've been lost in the shadow of doubt
I know too much to give up on love, and I know too much, to ever
try to figure it out

shadow of doubt
try to figure it out
I know too much, I've seen the light and I've been lost in the shadow of doubt
I know too much to give up on love, and I know too much, to ever
try to figure it out
