Replaced

Christine Lavin

I have been replaced in your life Why am I surprised
I'm the one who walked away
You're the one who cried
Now I hear that you've recovered
I should be relieved

Instead I hide under the covers at night I dream in black and white Second guess my every move Try not to think of you, because

I have been replaced in your life A blow to my pride It's been just a couple of months Since we were side by side Now I see that you go strolling by With someone else

While I continue on alone Heading for parts unknown Making solitary plans Braving the storms the best I can

If it's true that women mourn
While men replace
Who's the stronger
Who's the weaker
Why should it matter in any case

I have been replaced in your life The turning of the tides Has washed away your heartache Opened mine up wide Now I feel an old familiar hurt From years ago

And I know I've gone through this before
A different battle, a distant war
When the odd man out evens the score
It leaves you craving just a little bit more

I have been replaced I have been replaced I have been replaced In your life

I have been replaced in your life