With only one word You took the ice out of the air again And put the heat back in the sun again With only one word

With only one word You put the weapons of the world away

It's funny how one single thing you choose to say Will change the world and then
It suddenly means something better

Every single thing I see, good or bad You make it mean something better Every pleasure, every pain Every nightmare that I dream Make it mean something better

With only one word You change the ending of a tragedy And summon power from the injuries With only one word

It's funny how one single thing you choose to say
Will change the world and then
It suddenly means something better

Every single thing I see, good or bad You make it mean something better Every pleasure, every pain Every nightmare that I dream Make it mean something better

Every time that I can't make a sound And I think that I'm starting to drown Even when I try to take you down Every time that I think I'm alone

And I can't find a word of my own You take me home And then you change the world again

With only one word You took a war out of my history It's funny how one single thing you choose to see Could change the world And give it back to me so much better

Every single thing I see Every single thing I dream So much better Every pleasure, every pain
