The Ink in the Well

David Sylvian

The lights of the ashes smoulder through hills and vales Nostalgia burns in the hearts of the strongest Picasso is painting the ships in the harbour The wind and sails These are years with a genius for living

The rope is cut, the rabbit is loose (fire at will in this open season) The blood of a poet, the ink in the well (it's all written down in this age of reason)

The animals run through harvested fields of fire The bitterness shown on the face of the homeless Picasso is painting the flames from the houses The sudden rain These are years with a genius for living

The rope has been cut, the rabbit is loose (fire at will in this open season) The blood of a poet, the ink in the well (it's all written down in this age of reason)

Fire at will