A Day By The Lake

Disillusion

Back at last from yearning slumber when the nightly drama came to a close Hoping that fall will never come Salute the morning sun Inviting us to idleness Hoping that fall will never come The hour calls for secrecy silently we'd slip out to the lake Hoping that fall will never come And I stumble as of vertigo Can't await the sound of gentle waves melting with the rhythm of our crave.

But today there are only elegies
Filling our tainted elysium
Still hoping that fall will never come
This place turned to a fraud mirage
Deceitful and untrue.
Still hoping that fall will never come
Embraces solace me
They hide my tears in pastel drapery
Still hoping that fall will never come
And I cry just as you
Knowing, this is coming to an end
But still I am hoping that fall will never come.

But it came.