Every Man Has His Chain

Donovan

I had a dream as daylight touched the sky As breezes chased along the winter lane I had a dream as dreams alone I dream Has every man his chain, has every man his chain?

A negro hid beneath a face of blood And is there really anyone to blame? I marveled at the beauty of children's minds Has every man his chain, has every man his chain?

I saw a beach of sand beside the sea And there before me I saw every grain And I wondered, well, it was best this way Every man has his chain, every man has his chain
