Illumination Paradox

Enthrope

Five point shaped sign, symmetry of disgust Stagnant malediction cast spirits away Darken the golden sun, I am the new light Illumination paradox

Falling deeper down, I feel the dusk on me The moon and stars they hide their face from me Marked with this sign upon my burning skin I am the libertine

And they saw me fall as the morning star Hiding the moon as morning light

I am who I am, I am who he made To wander in the shade To be blamed by the sins you make All for your place in heaven to gain

I bring you the light, for shadows you desire Lust spawn paths revealed, I guide you through the fire You need me as much you need sin within You are the libertine

And they saw me fall as the morning star Hiding the moon as morning light

I am who I am, I am who he made To wander in the shade To be blamed by the sins you make All for your place in heaven to gain

With the image of man, black eyed and spawned with flies I am the new light and you are in the shade

With earth in my mouth I'll embrace the world Generations wait for a saint I'll still be under the sun after you are long since gone With a hunger of freedom I'll strife in this barren land

I bring you light, for shadows you desire This is the paradox You don't want to fall through the fire Still you call me when sin burns within

Generations fail Never to rise again They're all saved to leave me all the blame