I took a worn out strand of your cellophane hair and stretched it Sideways

And though my mind slipped though between the sea with me My brain stopped working from the cold

I sort of strayed from what we know
So I'll be like you and I'll do what's right
I'll win a love I don't deserve out on the ice tonight
Teach me the bluest song you know

The moon ain't comin' up
And I swear to God tonight it feels like snow
Glad we got your hands warm so my arms can feel like trust again
I can promise true waves when the summer comes

The world still fits the same form we engraved when it all began Maybe catch a new wave Feels right
So we ride whales and drag race time

And knock the fires from the traces of trilobite hives You sleep like God inside her womb And you see clearly too The silicon wasteland they left inside my mind

Glad we got your hands warm

So my arms can feel like trust again

I can promise true waves when the summer comes

The world still fits the same form we engraved when it all began

Maybe catch a new wave
We've lost the road now
Inject the charms
And we care for all of ours, we stand in rows now

Transfer alarms

Just like the Inuit with the promise song

Come down and see

Your solvents frozen here on the petal rung

Is all we have to see
Enlarged inside as we espy
The warming sea.
Your breath diffused and never realized

Aside from where the panicked hide And I
Just a subtle lift
Provider on the other side
