Alabama Pines

Jason Isbell

I moved into this room, if you could call it that, a week ago. I never do what I'm supposed to do. I hardly even know my name anymore. When no one calls it out, it kinda vanishes away. I can't get to sleep at night. The parking lot's so loud and br ight. The A.C. hasn't worked in twenty years. Probably never made a single person cold, but I can't say the same for me. I've done it many times. Somebody take me home through those Alabama pines. You can't drive through Talladega on a weekend in October. Head up north to Jacksonville. Cut around and over. Watch your speed in Boiling Springs. They ain't got a thing to do. They'll get you every time. Somebody take me home through those Alabama pines. Somebody take me home through those Alabama pines. If we pass through on a Sunday, better make a stop at Wayne's. It's the only open liquor store north, and I can't stand the pa in of being by myself without a little help on a Sunday afternoon. I needed that damn woman like a dream needs gasoline. I tried to be some ancient kind of man, one that's never seen the beauty in the world, but I tried to chase it down... tried to make the whole thing m ine. Somebody take me home through those Alabama pines. Somebody take me home through those Alabama pines. I've been stuck here in this town, if you could call it that, a year or two. I never do what I'm supposed to do. I don't even need a name anymore. When no one calls it out, it kinda vanishes away. No one gives a damn about the things I give a damn about. The liberties that we can't do without seem to disappear like ghosts in the air. When we don't even care, it truly vanishes away.
