The streets of the city are barren All the windows and doors have been closed As the night draws near You can feel their fear

Their freedom is just an illusion And they tell us that love is a lie Can it all be true What can one man do

See the pages as they turn
Never will the children learn
Born as a prisoner in a curtain of iron
Never will the pages turn

The City of Gold's in the distance And they've already forgotten their dream Visions slowly fade In this land of shade

See the pages as they turn
Never will the children learn
Born as a prisoner in a curtain of iron
Never will the pages turn

As the power grows, darkness spreading Hope is still alive, though we're dreading What the future holds, no more need to, fear what all men face Only good can win the race

Rumors speak of war, all the nations Turmoil in the streets, tribulations Now it's plain to see, all the prophecies are taking place Only good can win the race

There are fragments of truth still remaining And they bring them the light of the world To this hope we cling Till the bells will ring

See the pages as they turn
In their wisdom we will learn
Our bloody history soon will resolve
See the pages as they turn
In their wisdom we will learn
Free from the prison, a curtain of iron
