Over You

Michelle Featherstone

You're just so good my mind's so full of the lies you've been feeding and I ate them up like I needed them to survive

I drank your words but my body's been purged of their poison that's oozing throughout all of my veins now I'm clean and sober again and I'm over this childish need for attention I'm over your constant threats of rejection I'm over those eyes criticizing my every move I'm over you you were my disease but I'm finally free of your septic affection which has spread to my wounds but they've already healed

'cause I'm over this childish need for attention I'm over your futile attempts at redemption I'm over those lips condescending the things I do but your words are like honey so sweet and so thick but I've o.d.'ed on your sugar now it's all just making me sick and I'm over this childish need for attention I'm over your futile attempts at redemption I'm over those lips condescending the things I do and I'm over this childish need for attention I'm over this constant threat of rejection I'm over those eyes criticizing my every move I'm over you