You come to me Because you believe I can cast off demons To ward off the evil eye To nullify some sick sorcery that is upon you I mix the dung of a dog Foul canine excrement With barley flour Smear it on your shoulders Cast it from you And feed it unto you I have removed the demon Algalmati from you I have pushed the demon Annamiluli from your skull I have extinguished fire from your brow And ignited it in the sorcerer's head I have driven away the stench of the dog from you But the dog's excrement The dog's flesh The dog's bones You must utterly consume Lest the dog's shade Thinks it may yet return And will not rest Relentlessly tormenting you All the rest of your days
