

Far from the Harbour Wall

Rick Wright

A part of herself, she thought love was dying
The game of opposites, a hateful lie
She can't hang on at all
She's giving up the fight
She's locked in a wall of ice
Through half the day and half the night
On a path that's been prescribed

Nothing comes, but she can't leave her life
Or hear the falling rain, or the heart race in her
And dark as it grows at night, with fear of light's change
She's drowning away
In what she can do and what she contains
And her heart is so low

Now, because I could not cope with pain
How things are not the same, she's got no remedies
A heartbreaking fall and I fear a change of course
I feel like we were born insane
I hear the love, I fear the love
For the heart is so low, see how it grows apart

And deep from the other side, we live our lives so plain
We have no night, we have no day
We have no falling rain
Not love in our eyes, not love in our stare
Felt more like inner sea, had no quality
So say those who drown at night
Far from the harbour wall
Far from the harbour wall
