Western Shore

Ryan Bingham

You were all this needed to get you where you're going Tomorrow is the season, hold on the western shore! And you're not the reason, nobody care to notice They never saw you leaving cause they just don't know how to

You gotta run and stare so you could feel the change You gotta heal your heart so you could leave again another day!

You gotta live out loud with no one to fear With no one around who ever bring you down or give you tears Loud on the Western shore, you're no longer brave

And there is no one needed to tell you what you're knowing And only is believing, hold on the Western Shore! So you could leave the darkness that always kept you sleepless You can forget the place where the twisted hypocrites stop and stare

You gotta run and stare so you could feel the change You gotta heal your heart so you could leave again another day!

You gotta live out loud with no one to fear With no one around who ever bring you down or give you tears Loud on the Western shore, you're no longer brave

You gotta heal your heart so you could leave again another day!

You gotta live out loud with no one to fear With no one around who ever bring you down or give you tears Loud on the Western shore, you're no longer brave

Cause you're all that's needed to get you where you're going Tomorrow is the season, now hold on the Western Shore And now that are leaving, with nothing that you're owing You can forget the streets stop and stare

You gotta run and stare so you could feel the change You gotta heal your heart so you could leave again another day!

You gotta live out loud with no one to fear With no one around who ever bring you down or give you tears Loud on the Western shore, you're no longer brave

You gotta run and stare so you could feel the change You gotta heal your heart so you could leave again another day!

You gotta live out loud with no one to fear With no one around who ever bring you down or give you tears Loud on the Western shore, you're no longer brave