

As I'm walking alone I remember the times when we played here
Leaving a broken home making sure we were whole and together

Every failure we shared, every night that we were forsaken
I would dream of a life far away from it all but you

All these words that I left unspoken
I will say when I meet you again
I see you but I can't feel your presence
I feel you but you're fading away

Time is wise and our wounds seem to heal to the rhythm of aging
But our past is a ghost fading out that at night it's still haunting

We are growing apart, still I know that inside you're aching
But the scars that we share will remind us of who we are

All these words that I left unspoken
I will say when I meet you again
I see you but I can't feel your presence
I feel you but you're fading away

All these words that I left unspoken
I will say when I meet you again
I see you but I can't feel your presence
I feel you but you're fading away

Let it all wither
Let it all wither and let it go
