Said the Lord unto his Lady as he rode over the moss "Beware of Long Lankin that lives amongst the gorse Beware the moss, beware the moor, beware of Long Lankin Be sure the doors are bolted well Lest Lankin should creep in" Said the Lord unto his Lady as he rode away "Beware of Long Lankin that lives amongst the hay Beware the moss, beware the moor, beware of Long Lankin Be sure the doors are bolted well Lest Lankin should creep in" "Where's the master of the house?", says Long Lankin "He's 'way to London", says the nurse to him "Where's the lady of the house?", says Long Lankin "She's up in her chamber", says the nurse to him "Where's the baby of the house?", says Long Lankin "He's asleep in the cradle", says the nurse to him "We will pinch him, we will prick him We will stab him with a pin And the nurse shall hold the basin For the blood all to run in" So they pinched him and they pricked him Then they stabbed him with a pin And the false nurse held the basin For the blood all to run in "Lady, come down the stairs," says Long Lankin "How can I see in the dark?", she says unto him "You have silver mantles", says Long Lankin "Lady, come down the stairs by the light of them" Down the stairs the lady came, thinking no harm Lankin, he stood ready to catch her in his arms There was blood all in the kitchen There was blood all in the hall There was blood all in the parlor Where my lady she did fall Now Long Lankin shall be hanged From the gallows, oh, so high And the false nurse shall be burned In the fire close by Said the Lord unto his Lady as he rode over the moss "Beware of Long Lankin that lives amongst the gorse Beware the moss, beware the moor, beware of Long Lankin Make sure the doors are bolted well Lest Lankin should creep in"