Open Your Heart

Steve Lukather

Smoke-colored L.A. sky Hand covers up your sleepless eyes As morning creeps in Passed out there on my couch Wearing the face of down and out My long lost friend Three cups of coffee and you'll be on your way Until this time tomorrow you come crawling Back again

Open your heart to me Think of my shoulder as as sanctuary Open your soul to me I'll try to unravel your tangled up dreams And the only thing that matters is your heart stays open for me

I always pictured you As clear minded but confused with wounds No one could see You always made the friends That never stuck with you until the end Except for me And the only difference I hear is your alibi And the only thing in common is the reason You're still here

Open your heart to me Think of my shoulder as sanctuary Open your soul to me I'll try to unravel your tangled up dreams And the only thing that matters is your heart stays open for me

I can feel your loneliness I feel your pain
