Jumping Someone Else's Train

Don't say what you mean You might spoil your face If you walk in the crowd You won't leave any trace It's always the same You're jumping someone else's train

It won't take you long To learn the new smile You'll have to adapt Or you'll be out of style It's always the same You're jumping someone else's train

If you pick up on it quick You can say you were there Again and again and again You're jumping someone else's train

It's the latest wave That you've been craving for The old ideal Was getting such a bore Now you're back in line Going not quite quite as far But in half the time Everyone's happy They're finally all the same 'cause everyone's jumping Everyone else's train

Jumping someone else's train Jumping someone else's train Jumping someone else's train The Cure