Fun For All The Family

The Monochrome Set

The painter was dismissed today We paid him off and put him away He'd drawn us true to life and then He'd just refused to do it again

For we were not amused at all
To see a painting upon the wall
Which clearly showed what fools were we
To jealously guard a pedigree

We were all so very concerned To see the commoners never learned That inter-breeding could be blamed For the decline of the regal brain

Indeed the blood was truly blue But thinner with time, alas, we knew Now we are all a little insane And life can never be the same

Mister Goya, we all declare
Was most unkind and very unfair
To paint us in the way he did
As if the royals had lost their lids

Damn it all, the family pets Were made to look a safer bet Because we give a regal hoot Somebody always cocks a snoot
