Lillian Lies

Youth Group

Lillian lies to avoid awkward questions
Looks to the sky for intervention
But she can't avoid judgmental
Compassion
In the void

She puts on her face, makes it a brave one Gets herself a seat on an interstate greyhound When everything's gone at least you've got nothing That holds on

She curls herself up, rests her head on the window Sees her face in the trees suspended in limbo When everything's gone at least you've got nothing That holds on

You're a stranger in a country town
The kids all stare, the cars slow down
You didn't think you'd be so dumb
To just grab a hold of whatever came along

Houses slip by, the cloud are so low The sky doesn't cover, it swallows
